A DEADLY GRADE CROSSING

Neither Flagman Nor Whistle to Warn John Mead of His Fate.

Passengers Hold an Indignation Meeting on the Train.

A grade crossing without gate or flagman, and with the main track hidden by a freight train, is considered by passengers of Long Island train No. 14 as responsible for a probably fatal acci-dent at Rockville Centre this morning. The victim was John Mead, a mason, fifty-five years old. With his fifteenyear-old son by his side he was driving teross an unprotected crossing at Rockrille Centre just when the Babylon rain, due at 8.22 A. M., arrived. Beween the main track and the direction rom which Mead was approaching is switch on which a freight train was idetracked. At the crossing the train as cut to give an opening just a triffe ider than a wagon. The train was coming into the station ith air-brakes on, and there was no oise from the engine's exhaust pipe. lystanders say that the bell was no ong, and that the whistle had not bee lown.

Mead did not see or hear the train, nd drave his horse directly in front f it. The horse was thrown thirty feet a the opposite side of the track and alled. The wagon was dashed the other vay, and with it went Mead and his loy. Mr. Mead's skull was cut open rom the forehead directly over the head of the hase of the brain. Those who deked him up my they could plainly see his brain.

He was removed to a store near by the directly over the head of the base of the brain. ee his brain.

the physician said there was no hope for his recovery.

The boy's head was cut badly, and Sthere was a splinter in his neck, but a he was not dangerously injured. He asserted that the engine did not whistle while approaching the crossing.

The passengers on the train held an timformal indignation meeting on the way to the city. Many believed that the train would have been wrecked if at thad not been moving slowly.

ton avenue early this m rning. While crossing alone he slipped and fell overboard. Somers promptly went into the water from the pier, and as he dived down his hands came in contact with a body. Thinking it was Marion, Somers retained a tight hold. When he got to the surface he was astonished to find that he had a corpse.

The body was that of a man about thirty-five, 5 feet, 8 inches in height. The man had dark hair and side whiskers and wore a good business suit. The body had evidently been in the water for several days. A gold watch and some money were in the pockets, but there was nothing by which the body could be identified.

Somers was so busy rescuing the corpse that be paid no attention to Marion, who was drowned. His body was recovered later by the crew of the police boat Judge Moore.
